A five day quarantine in ports of the Santerage passengers from cholera ports in Europe is now being seriously considered. There is already such a detendent for observation in the foreign ports affected of passengers intending for the Inited States.

Surgeon-General Walter Wyman, head of the United States Marine-Hospital Service, went to Quarantine here yesterday to confer with Health Officer Doty, the country generally being concerned about the admission of the disease in any of the ports of Uncle Sam. Dr. Wyman approved the work of Dr. Doty and was pleased with New York's way of doing things. About the situation generally head there was no reason why anybody.

Before leaving for Washington again Dr Wyman said that he would not put a blockade on cabin passengers entering this or other American ports from the Mediterranean. If cholera should appear in the cabin passengers would be held, but the strong probabilities were against the disease coming in the cabin and the likelihood was that it would be of a sporadic nature if it should be detected in the steerage or among the ships crews. CABDINAL M'CLOSKEY REMEMBERED.
High in the church, nearly above the altar, hung the red hat of Cardinal McCloskey, the first in the United States to be invested with membership in the College of Cardinals and the man who as Archbisop of New York did much to bring about the building of the Cathedral. The celebration of the consecration of St. Patrick's is also the celebration of the celebration of the celebration of the centenary of the birth of Cardinal Mecloskey, and the services to mark the latter event which were to have been held last March were postponed by Archbisop Farley that the man who did so much for St. Patrick's might be honored in the consecration of the edifice which he helped to rear.

The Cathedral was well filled when the procession arrived, and during the render-last of the reshute it became crowded.
